Inspired by flight attendants, post office and railway workers ask for better work conditions

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/national/national-news/2016/07/05/471292/Inspired-by.htm>

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- Encouraged by China Airlines (CAL, 中華航空) union's successful strike, unions representing the Taiwan Railway Administration (TRA, 台鐵) and Chunghwa Post (中華郵政) said that they will stage protests to address shortages of human resources, unreasonable salaries, and other issues.

The TRA union will meet Transportation and Communications Minister Ho Chen Tan (賀陳旦) today and will urge laborers to strike on Sept. 3 if the government doesn't propose solutions.

The Chunghwa Post union also voiced three demands and asked for their employer's response as soon as possible.

Faced with labor frustrations, Deputy Transportation Minister Wang Kwo-tsai (王國材) said it is impossible to copy CAL's work terms because conditions vary across corporations. However, the government can hold discussions if both sides remain open minded and consider not only worker benefits, but also company operations, Wang said.

"The TRA is confronted with a shortage of drivers, conductors and mechanics," the union's Secretary-general Liu Ren-jie (劉人杰) said. Long working hours and a shift system are the main reasons why there are fewer people applying to take the TRA exam.

This year some 24,000 people signed up to take the exam, a record low since the test was reintroduced.

Taiwan Railways' work conditions are worse than those of other state-run companies, Liu said.

The union has been reticent about the unfair conditions, Liu said, adding that it hopes to carry out a dialogue with the new government, which holds labor interests in high regard.

Liu added that the union expects to negotiate with new government to ask for more laborers, reasonable days off and overtime compensation. If the government does not take the demands seriously, the union plans to hold a strike on Sept. 3 to show its determination.

The Chunghwa Post union has also recently communicated with its employer. Its demands include a postage increase, recruiting more employees and increasing wages by 10 percent.

ASEAN officials point out investment challenges

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/business/2016/07/16/472433/ASEAN-officials.htm>

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- At the "Taiwan-ASEAN Strategic Investment Partnership Forum", six representatives from Southeast Asian countries pointed out the challenges that Taiwanese businessmen may confront when investing in the region.

Representatives emphasized that investors and businessmen developing careers in these countries should not only abide by local laws, but should also understand the differences between each country.

Delegates from Indonesia, the Philippines, Malaysia and Thailand all indicated that their countries lack public infrastructure, and that local governments are attempting to expand on existing infrastructure, a process that foreign investors can contribute to.

In addition, according to panelists, laws in Indonesia and the Philippines are not complete. "We are short of laws, and some local laws even contradict the central government's laws. We are working on this issue." Indonesia's Investment Coordinating Board (BKPM) deputy chairman Himawan Hariyoga said.

Human resource issues are common in Southeastern Asian countries, especially in Indonesia, Malaysia and Thailand. Indonesia is attempting to boost worker productivity and skills, while the other two countries are confronting aging populations and labor shortages, representatives from these countries said.

A representative from Vietnam called on foreign businessmen to comply with local laws and said it is necessary to pay attention to environmental protection.

According to the results of the Vietnamese government's investigation announced in June, Formosa Ha Tinh Steel Corp., an offshoot of Formosa Plastics Group (台塑集團), emitted toxic wastewater that caused tons of fish to die in early April.

Although this case will not determine Taiwan's investment in Vietnam overall, investors should abide by rules and value environmental protection, said Do Nhat-hoang, director general of Vietnam's Foreign Investment Agency under the Ministry of Planning and Investment, said

"We think investors from Taiwan are important to us, and we will help them develop their business in Vietnam in the future." Do added.

Delegates visited Vietnam, Thailand to talk trade: MOEA

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/foreign-affairs/2016/07/13/472117/Delegates-visited.htm>

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- As part of President Tsai Ing-wen's "New Southbound Policy," Vice Economics Minister Yang Wei-fu (楊偉甫) indicated Tuesday that government delegates had visited Vietnam and Thailand last week.

Yang attended the APEC O2O Summit tailored for small- and medium-sized enterprises Tuesday. He said the government had already made contact with the two Southeast Asian countries, introduced the new economic policy to Taiwan's businessmen and said that the international exchange would continue.

In the economic forum, "The Future of Asian Enterprises," held Tuesday, Namchow Group (南僑) Executive Vice President Li Kan-wen (李勘文) said that while both Taiwan and Thailand's rice products were exported to the U.S., the American government imposed a 14-percent tax on Taiwan's products, and a 1-percent tax on Thailand's.

Production in Southeast Asia and then selling the product to global markets offers a lower tariff benefit, Li said.

Li raised Norway as example: There are 500 sushi stores in Norway, and most of the owners purchase equipment and containers from Taiwan due to the lower tax rates, he said. However, they purchase rice from Thailand rather than Taiwan because the latter imposes a 40-percent tax, despite its sterile-packaged rice that is more suitable for sushi, he said.

CTBC Bank Chief Strategy Officer Shi Jing-fu (施景富), on the other hand, said that although Taiwan would not necessarily sign free trade agreements with every country or region, Taiwanese businessmen can still achieve their goal of making no or lower tax in different ways.

The Southeast Asian market is large and attractive to lots of businessmen. The first thing for them to do in order to enter the market is to avoid talking about politics, Shi stated.

Shi mentioned that economic conditions vary in each Southeast Asian country. He believes that Singapore is the first choice for financial companies to enter the market. Although the nation's exports have declined over the past five years, annual compound growth for local banks has reached 10 percent thanks to their good grasp of development in the Asian market, Shi said.

At this stage Vietnam is also a suitable market for the financial industry to enter, Shi added.

Government should resume parasite investigation: scholar

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/intl-community/2016/07/18/472608/Government-should.htm>

A scholar recommended the government resume investigations into parasites, due to increasing globalization and international exchange, the United Evening News reported.

Fan Chia-kwung (范家堃), director of Taipei Medical University's department of molecular parasitology and tropical diseases, said Taiwan halted investigations into parasites over the past several decades. Fan pointed out that mainland China conducted the decennial general survey of parasites this year.

Centers for Disease Control's (CDC, 疾管署) Deputy Director-General Chuang Jen-hsiang (莊人祥) said that it is necessary for mainland China to conduct the survey due to its vast land; however, fewer than 10 cases of parasitic infections are reported per year in Taiwan and most parasites are not considered to be communicable diseases by the CDC. Moreover, most parasitic infections can be cured with medicine.

Chuang added that, in the past, most cases of infection were caused by the consumption of raw snails. Chuang thought that it may be appropriate for experts to evaluate again whether the government should conduct the national parasitic survey.

Two Hundred Hookworms in the Gut

Fan said he was involved with treating two cases of parasitic infections resulting from close contact with pets this year. He even examined a patient with over 200 living, two-to-three-centimeters-long hookworms in his intestines because this patient exposed his naked feet to soil while gardening.

Chuang explained that tiny parasites are able to penetrate the skin and migrate to various organs.

Although hygiene conditions are better now in Taiwan, people can sometimes still be infected by parasites, Fan said. He suggested people wear shoes while walking outside and seek medical advice if they feel explicable weak.

In case patients are unable to ascertain the cause of their ailment, taking a fecal examination which can examine parasitic infections easily may be a better choice, Fan said.

With 408 days to go, no Universiade venues completed: councilor

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/local/taipei/2016/07/08/471628/With-408.htm>

None of the 60 venues designated for the 2017 Taipei Summer Universiade are currently ready for operation, a Taipei City councilor said on Wednesday.

With only 408 days to go before Taipei hosts the Summer Universiade, the city government is worryingly behind schedule, Councilor Wang Hong-wei (王鴻薇) said at a press conference on Wednesday.

Seven of the 60 venues are brand new structures, two of which have been contracted. Fifty-three are existing structures to be retrofitted for the Summer Universiade, which will be held from Aug. 19-30, 2017.

Wang pointed out that only 10 of the 53 renovation projects have been contracted. Eighteen projects were originally scheduled to be put up for bid in June, but none of the bids came through. Four bids ended without a bidder while others haven't yet entered the bidding process.

Wang challenged Taipei City Mayor Ko Wen-je's (柯文哲) statement that construction is intentionally scheduled to avoid completion before August 2016, so that one-year warranties on the structures will not have to be renewed before the Universiade takes place. According to Wang, renovation projects typically take three to eight months to complete and must subsequently be evaluated. Wang said that even if all renovation projects can be completed by the end of September, the earliest possible date for completion, the one-year warranty for these structures will extend beyond the August 2017 Universiade.

On the other hand, Department of Sports senior executive officer Lu Sheng-yuan (呂生源) said that the International University Sports Federation (FISU) had kept constant attention on Taiwan's venues. The FISU deemed the government's contracting plan reasonable when its staff came to Taiwan for an inspection tour in May of this year.

Lu added that the Summer Universiade Preparatory Office plans to complete online bidding by July or August. According to Lu, the Taipei government will have enough time to execute trial operations if they finish construction before April of next year.

Moreover, Wu Wei-ming (吳偉銘), deputy chief of the Summer Universiade taskforce, expressed that the government was trying hard to ensure the 10 venues that have been contracted will be completed on schedule. He said he hoped Taipei Stadium could be the first venue to be completed. It is scheduled to be finished in November 2016.

Industry group calls for lifting limit on monthly overtime cap to 54 hrs

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/national/national-news/2016/07/20/472809/Industry-group.htm>

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- The Chinese National Federation of Industries (CNFI) on Tuesday advocated increasing the maximum allowable overtime from 46 hours to 54 hours a month.

CNFI Chairman Rock Hsu (許勝雄) said the group's demands were simple and clear: It wanted the government to scrap seven public holidays, extend the maximum allowable overtime to 54 hours a month, and implement "one fixed day off and one flexible" rest day every week (一例一休).

On the same day, laborers from several unions gathered outside the Legislative Yuan to protest the proposal to cancel seven national holidays as well as the "one fixed, one flexible" proposal.

Eight workers went on a hunger strike to express dissatisfaction.

Responding to the workers' demonstration, the CNFI chairman said that he was not opposed to decreasing working hours, but that "we are not allowed to lead the European or American lifestyle" in the current environment of Taiwan.

Hsu said that several corporations and the government had previously agreed to a 54-hour overtime cap after conducting 35 rounds of negotiations.

He emphasized that it was important for the government to consider the interests of multiple parties and to establish appropriate policies.

Hsu also called on the nation to work together to resolve the issue rather than stay in a state of conflict.

He said he felt that the workers' hunger strike was "inappropriate."

Hsu pointed out that the number of work hours in Taiwan was the lowest among the Four Asian Tigers (亞洲四小龍).

"Annual work hours total 2,086 in Taiwan, 2,142 in Korea and 2,392 in both Hong Kong and Singapore," Hsu said.

Members of several unions threatened to strike after the China Airlines (華航) union launched a successful strike, Hsu said, adding that he hoped the government would not delay in dealing with these issues.

If the government doesn't solve laborers' problems and conflicts quickly and rationally, companies' willingness to invest would be affected and economic development may be hampered, Hsu worried.

Vive showing in Japan lifts HTC shares past NT$100 on main index

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/business/2016/07/14/472170/Vive-showing.htm>

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- Taiwan-based smartphone brand HTC Corp.'s (宏達電) stock price rebounded to over NT$100 after sales of HTC Vive got traction in the Japanese market, joining the Taiwan Stock Exchange's surge recently.

HTC announced last week that it would extend cooperation with Japan's famous software, hardware and retail brands for sales of the virtual reality product HTC Vive, moving the product into physical stores.

The news stimulated HTC stock prices to go up by 3.5 percent, hitting NT$101.5 during trading and successfully allowing the corporation to recover from low revenues in June.

Corporations cooperating with HTC include NVIDIA (輝達), Advanced Micro Devices (超微), the large Japanese game brand BANDAI NAMCO Entertainment, Japanese VR fund company Colopl next, and more. These firms, along with other new participants, are expected to enlarge the VR ecosystem.

The three authorized retail partners in Japan are Dospara, TSUKUMO and UNITCOM.

HTC Vive has entered 36 physical stores in Japan and is expected to reach a total of 45 try-out and sales stores at the end of this year.

HTC said that the amount of first orders placed in stores is many times that placed through e-commerce.

People can browse many HTC Vive try-out zones in consumer electronics stores on the streets of Tokyo, and the gadget is ready for consumers to purchase. This Taiwan-based brand, by providing an immersive user experience VR device, has not only initiated a new technological topic of conversation in Tokyo, but has also infused new energy into the PC entertainment industry.

HTC Vive, separate to Japanese game giant Sony, is proving its ability to be a rising force in the VR market. HTC has an optimistic attitude, saying that with awesome VR applications and games, as well as cooperation with partners in Japan, Vive will boast great advantages.

Taiwan Mobile and Nokia ink MOU to develop 5G

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/business/2016/07/24/473242/Taiwan-Mobile.htm>

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- Taiwan Mobile Co. (台灣大哥大) announced last week that it has signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with Nokia to jointly develop fifth-generation (5G) technology.

Taiwan Mobile said it would step up 5G research and development in the second half of the year, ready to be the first wireless service provider offering a 5G service in Taiwan.

According to the MOU, Taiwan Mobile and Nokia will expand their collaboration step by step to the "experimental network" level. In the network, both companies will develop innovative technologies including 5G wireless technology, the internet of things (IoT), spectrum arrangement and other applications.

In addition, the two companies will form a strategic alliance, in which they will test products, hold seminars, visit Nokia 5G research and development centers, and communicate with international pioneers in the 5G field together.

Taiwan Mobile General Manager James Cheng (鄭俊卿) said that signing the MOU with Nokia is important for Taiwan to march toward 5G technology. In the future, they will not only make technology breakthroughs and integrate resources, but also kick-start a new era of information and communication technology applications, via thorough network, application and end-user preparations.

Cheng suggested that if the government opens up "experimental network" spectrums before formally releasing 5G spectrums to businesses, it will aid teleservice providers in their 5G development quest. The goal of providing customized internet service will become a reality through cloud technology virtualization and network evolution from "IP" to "IT" in the 5G era, Cheng added.

Cheng said that Taiwan Mobile's 4G mobile network will support NB-IoT next year, and that it will consider implementing other technologies, such as LoRa technology at the same time. Cheng expected that Taiwan Mobile will stay in the leadership position after Taiwan enters the 5G era.

Wang Jian-ya (王建亞), the head of Nokia's Greater China operation, said that it was very meaningful for the two companies, after collaborating for almost 20 years, to sign the 5G MOU. It showed an "awesome partnership" between Nokia and Taiwan Mobile, Wang said. He added that they would have exchanges on critical technologies regularly and develop applications for IoT to promote the development of 5G, Cloud System and other technologies in the industry.

Wang emphasized that many IoT applications closely related to people's life were connected to 5G technologies, and that 5G would bring new possibilities in the society. Wang said he was looking forward to the opportunities enabled by 5G and IoT, through partnership with Taiwan Mobile.

Taiwan to receive more panel orders from S. Korea: report

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/business/2016/07/07/471523/Taiwan-to.htm>

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- South Korean TV brands have made a U-turn on strategy and shifted orders in 2016 from domestic panels to ones from Taiwan and mainland China, according to the latest report from WitsView, a division of the market research institute named TrendForce.

Japanese TV brands have also stepped up purchases from Taiwanese and South Korean suppliers, according to the report.

WitsView said that fewer orders of Samsung (三星) Display panels from the TV brand Samsung was the main reason that domestic panel purchases by South Korean brands fell from 50.5 percent of total panels bought in 2015 to 43.7 percent this year.

South Korean brands will also be relying more on Taiwanese and mainland Chinese firms as a result of Samsung Display's closure of FAB L7-1 project at the end of this year.

In Japan, domestic TV brands' demand for domestic panels has dropped by 14.1 percent, according to the report.

The main causes are Hon Hai Precision Industry's (鴻海) acquisition of Sharp Corp. (夏普) this March and Panasonic IPS Alpha's (松下姬路工廠) plan to leave the business in the fourth quarter this year due to losses.

To maintain a high standard of quality, Japanese brands are reportedly set to turn to Taiwanese and South Korean suppliers.

But Japanese orders have appeared to gravitate to Korea's LG Display, whose market share soared from last year's 17.6 percent to 26.4 percent in 2016.

Rival company Samsung Display's Black Column Spacer (BCS) production process has affected shipments while Taiwan-based AU Optronics's TV panel production capacity is limited.

Due to quality and quantity considerations, Chinese TV brands have continued to purchase Taiwanese and South Korean panels, especially large-sized TV panels (55 inches and 65 inches), WitsView research manager Ricky Lin (林鈺順) said.

Dep't stores launch offers for Valentine's, Father's Day

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan/business/2016/07/24/473230/Dept-stores.htm>

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- Department stores are launching promotional sales for the upcoming Chinese Valentine's Day and Father's Day holidays.

Department stores have been affected by the slack season, according to Shin Kong Mitsukoshi (新光三越百貨) Vice General Manager of Operations Joseph Yang (楊宗榮), who said that purchases had been slow this year. He compared the state of the industry to a "smoldering pot."

"We feel stifled and buying just won't go up," Yang said.

Faced with declining sales of 2 percent in the first half of 2016, Shin Kong Mitsukoshi is launching promotions from July 22 to Aug. 1, offering NT$200 after customers make a purchase of NT$2,000. During the promotional period, the company would like to achieve a sales target of NT$4 billion.

Yang said that he was not worried that the promotions would undercut sales during end-of-the-year promotions. He emphasized that the products promoted are different and that the goal of the summer promotion was to "bring out buying."

Far Eastern Department store (遠東百貨) is also launching a special "spend NT$2,000 to get NT$200 free" program from July 21 to Aug. 8.

In addition, if consumers spend NT$4,000 at Living Mall (京華城) with a membership card (京華卡) during promotion periods — July 22-24, July 29-31, and Aug. 5-9 — they will receive a NT$500 coupon. With the store's Living Card, consumers will get a NT$400 coupon for every NT$4,500 purchase.

Gloria Outlet (華泰名品城) General Manager Liang Shu-fan (梁曙凡) said that the store had reached NT$2 billion in sales so far this year, and that the so-called department store slow season had not affected the outlet market at all.

6,000 people use public transportation on 'Carfree Day'

<http://www.chinapost.com.tw/taiwan-business/2016/07/25/473309/6000-people.htm>

TAIPEI, Taiwan -- Six thousand people opted for public transportation last Friday for the "ASE 722 Carfree Day" organized by Advanced Semiconductor Engineering Inc.'s (ASE, 日月光) Kaohsiung plant.

Held two months ahead of World Carfree Day — an international event France initiated on Sept. 22, 1998 — "ASE 722 Carfree Day" intends to encourage the company's workforce to choose public over private transportation.

Although the event was organized by only one company in the Nanzih Export Processing Zone (楠梓加工區), the activity spread throughout the whole district.

There were noticeably fewer cars and motorcycles in the export zone, and people said the Nanzih Export Processing Zone had become more beautiful.

ASE Senior Vice President Chou Kuang-chun (周光春) said heavy traffic in the export zone led to higher carbon dioxide emissions.

He said ASE took its social responsibility "very seriously," building bus stops powered by solar energy and offering additional shuttle services since April.

Chou called on ASE employees to thoroughly utilize public transportation to create a better work environment, enhance traffic safety and improve the quality of life.

Yang Bo-gen (楊伯耕), deputy director of the Nanzih Export Processing Zone under the Ministry of Economic Affairs, said that ASE was a leading company in the export zone and that he expected more enterprises to join Carfree Day the future, making the environment better.

ASE said it began promoting Carfree Day in June, giving away bicycles and electric kick scooters by lottery in order to encourage worker participation. There were also awards given to the best green energy slogan creator.

At the event, Kaohsiung Transportation Bureau showcased some green energy vehicles and invited the public to test-ride them in front of the ASE K11 building.

The government hopes to advance citizens' awareness of green transportation and environmental protection through the activity.

LI WEN YEN

Statement of purpose

I am a senior from National Chengchi University in Taiwan, with a major in journalism and a minor in public administration. In the classes, I always challenged traditional opinions and got professors' admiration. For example, once I proposed to redefine the step of "historical method" in the Research Method class. I am not afraid of failure and always willing to try something new. This summer I worked as a finance news reporter for my internship in The China Post, an international English newspaper that was originated in Taiwan. The newspaper published 11 of the 15 articles I wrote. I had only taken some finance courses at university and had never reported anything in English before this experience. In addition, I have always been viewed as a great leader, storyteller, and volunteer in classes or in clubs.

The reason why I plan to pursue a master degree in journalism stems from what I experienced during the "Sunflower Student Movement" in Taiwan. At that time, most of our mainstream news media reported the movement from a biased perspective. Though I was a freshman then, I came to realize that Taiwan's media have a lot of problems. I hope that, with what I have learned and what I would learn from you, I can have the ability and opportunities to lead them out of all the dilemmas in which they are caught.

My academic interests include audience and news media analysis, media management and innovation, the relationship among the government, media and society (freedom of press, freedom of information, citizen journalist, and First Amendment), as well as sports and the media.

The goals of my academic career in the future will be as follows: First, I will keep comparing the difference between Taiwan's media and America's media, accumulate knowledge about theories and related skills, and then practice them through the internship. Second, I want to be a journalist, digging out problems of the society and trying to solve them through my reporting. It is my wish to establish another news brand, one that cares about not only its revenues, but also its responsibilities and the quality of its contents. My news and media company will be a leader to improve the environment and make audience believe the integrity of news media again. Third, I plan to enter the National Communications Commission, a government agency like the FCC, to boost media quality and information literacy of our citizens.

Why do I fit into this program and what will I contribute? The answer can be divided into three parts. To begin with, Indiana University has the Center for International Media Law and Policy Studies and offers a course called “The Press and the Constitution.” I am learning Taiwan’s media law and have come to know that sometimes freedom or flaws of the legislating process will lead to disasters. I desire to exchange my views with others on these topics. Next, Indiana University puts great emphasis on sports, running not only a sports media center but also a student media organization for sports. I have had three-year experience in student media, including being a sports reporter for one year. My group and I have even made our organization the most famous student media in Taiwan. To be honest, I am also a Taekwondo and a basketball player; I believe that through cooperation I can make a lot of contribution to your organizations. Finally, since I come from a country greatly influenced by Mainland China, I study the cultures, societies, politics, and the media in Eastern Asia countries. I look forward to exchanging my views and opinions with classmates from other countries.

I firmly believe that I can broaden the horizons of my knowledge and perspective if I am admitted to your program, which offers not only a degree that matches my goals, but also student media organizations, excellent classmates, and a lot of other elements to which I hope to make great contribution. In the future, I will certainly do my best to make Indiana University proud of me.

Please comment specifically on the applicant's strengths and limitations for graduate study. To Whom It May Concern,

My name is John Liu, a business reporter at the Taiwan-based English newspaper The China Post. I had the pleasure of mentoring Li Wen-yen while she interned at the Post earlier this year.

I can honestly say that among the summer interns I've met over the years, Wen-yen is one of the brightest. She is a student at the prestigious National Chengchi University Journalism Department, and her grade achievement consistently ranks among the top 10 of her class.

While the academic background indicates her potential, it was her work performance that separated her from the rest. Wen-yen has good command of English, and she strived to turn in good work every day. The spirit to do well is not common among the students who have interned here.

But her drive to achieve and accomplish more, in my opinion, is what separates her from the pack. She took the initiative to interview people, take press photos, and during her time at the Post, she put in extra time to see to it that her job was well done.

I believe her actions reflect a sense of clear purpose from within. I've seen Wen-yen's personal statement and I can see that she is motivated and is eager to learn. Given her track record, I think she will succeed and be an asset at your institution.

Yours truly,

John Liu

To Whom This Letter May Concern

September 23 2016

Wen-yen Li (Renita) is an unusual student that I wish to recommend strongly and earnestly to your esteemed institute.

Renita enrolled in two of my optional courses, one deals in the main with various aspects of Taiwan's media industries, evaluating their journalistic performances in particular. The other centers upon international dimension and considers how Taiwan's media interact with their foreign counterparts. In both cases, Wen-yen does not stop at following the lectures or reading materials I assign or recommend, by what she wrote in the examinations and the questions she put forward in the classes, I had adequate occasions observing her preparations and dedications. I came to the conclusion that this diligent student must have spent not less than three or four hours every week in familiarizing herself with knowledge and information that is required should one could have such impressive performances.

In addition to her keen interests in journalism and public administration, Wen-yen is a sports lover, she is good at Taekwondo and Karate, and she plays basketball. Having served as an intern reporter in one of Taiwan's prestigious English newspapers this past summer vacation, she is therefore now invited to supervise her juniors producing this University's campus weekly. And during the past three years, Wen-yen had provided a few times her service as interpreter in related contests, in addition to joining the team representing this University.

Every year the number of students I taught ranges between 100 and 120, and as I see it, Wen-yen can always be ranked among the top three over the years. I certainly wish to make an unreserved recommendation that you offer her a place in your program, should you need further information so that Wen-yen can have a more favorable consideration, please do not hesitate to make contacts.

Yours faithfully,

Sept. 2, 2016

To Whom It May Concern:

Ms. Wen-Yen Li, a senior student in this department, recently approached me to request for a letter of recommendation in support of her application to your esteem program in journalism/mass communication. I have known Ms. Li for almost a year since she registered in my course entitled "Research Methods" in Fall, 2015, and therefore I am more than happy to endorse her application. Please grant her your most favorable consideration since she no doubt has my highest support.

The abovementioned course "Research Methods" was a required one offered for all communication majors, and about 70 students appeared in the Fall, 2015 course. They were then grouped in teams and responsible to complete three term projects in the whole semester, and both written and oral presentations were required.

According to my gradebook, the team that Ms. Li attended received the highest scores in the whole semester with 95, 95, and 91 respectively for the three projects that they completed. Believe me, the team has performed excellently even though the teammates did not know each other well in the beginning but were "forced" to soon cooperate as a group.

To fulfill course requirements, they needed to read academic papers as many as possible, all by themselves since the instructor did not lecture at all and only responded to each team's presentations. Later they had to organize what they have learned from these readings and then finished both written and oral presentations in a very short period of time for preparation.

The Li's team has maintained a high spirit to learn in the whole semester; that's the only reason that they could receive three high scores well above the class average.

Ms. Li has probably contributed to the team's performance in a unique way. She was never late in the class and frequently raised her hand to discuss all the questions in mind. This attitude of strong willingness to learn was quite important since if there is no dialogue among the listeners in the class, then the presenters would find no pressure to prepare their reports.

Again, according to my gradebook, Ms. Li received a final score of 93, which could be ranked as top 5% in this class. To tell you the truth, even today I still appreciated what Ms. Li has done as a responsible student in such a class with so many students.

To my knowledge, Ms. Li also performed well in her other courses and extracurricular activities, which was good enough to show her potential to be a responsible graduate student in your program. For this reason she certainly has my full support for her application.

Sincerely Yours,

Kuo-Jen Tsang, Ph.D.
